Message:

The best thing you could do in redistricting is to make as many districts as possible to be competitive. This will increase interest in voting and make it less likely that each party's fringes increase their power. You harm the public interest when you draw non-competitive districts where the incumbents have nothing to worry about except for the far-right or far-left of their parties. In effect, you are disenfranchising great swathes of voters to further your own political power, and that is wrong.
